Lead-contaminated opium alert

NSW Health recommends blood lead level screening for any patient suspected of ingesting or inhaling illicit opium products at any point since early 2016. There have been cases of severe lead poisoning in NSW and Victoria believed to result from the use of illicit opium products contaminated with lead. Lead poisoning can be difficult to diagnose and should be considered in patients who have abdominal pain, constipation and anaemia of unexplained origin.

Survey: Gout Self-Management App in Primary Care

University of NSW (UNSW) researchers are evaluating the efficacy of a mobile app to aid in the management and control of gout in primary care. This cluster randomised trial compares the efficiency of two apps in achieving target serum urate concentrations. The NHMRC-funded project is led by Prof Ric Day, St Vincent's Clinical School. GPs who have seen patients with gout in the last year are invited to participate. RACGP- and ACRRM-accredited professional development points are available, and each participating GP practice will receive a $300 gift voucher.
